The Russian Imperial Cabinet has approved a plan to establish colonies of convicts sentenced to hard labor on the Russian islands of the Caspian Sea. To such colonies will be sent犯人 from the cities of the Donets, and from the Turkistan who could not stand the severe climate of Siberia or of the island of Saghalien.

The Russian Ministry of Justice has issued new laws concerning the repetition of crimes and "cumulative offenses," and submitted them to the Imperial Cabinet for approval. According to these laws, a criminal who has served his sentence in prison has been pardoned by the Czar, is rehabilitated perfectly, and if he commits a new crime his punishment is to be increased twice what it was for the first crime.

To the south of the General Teritorio on the Don has issued orders to send men and landowners to adopt measures to destroy all the sheve (muces ciliadas) on their lands who did not come to the party recently. Prince de France has given the chief of French naval staff the financial means necessary to move by rail two army corps at the next maneuver. The Don and the Lyons Railway will be used for the movement. It is found that such persons, even though they will not form and to do useful work, can find no employment. HISTORY OF GAS.

Its Introduction and Growth in Popular Favor.

Experiments in gas making were made in England in 1690, but not until 1792 was any success obtained.

In that year William Murdoch, a young boy, invented the gas lamp, with gas obtained from coal.

In 1813, it was introduced for street-lighting purposes, Westchester Bridge being the first town to use it.

Gas was first used in the United States in 1822, and sixteen years later there are now eighteen thousand gas companies in the country.

LYNDON OF HIGH CLIFFE.

AN OLD SOLDIER'S LOVE STORY.

By C. DESPARD, Author of "When the Tide was High," "The Artist and the Man," "Into a Larger Room," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XI.

VERONICA'S DISAPPOINTMENT.

In the morning, when Colonel Lyndon's engagements had taken him away from his wife, Percy and Veronika were full of ambition and hope. They rove over to Deep Deane immediately after the Castle Ettrick lunch. At the door of the house Mrs. Mackenzie, who had been there, said:

"Come this way," she said, leading the way to the dining-room. "They did not expect us."

After they had chatted together for a few minutes, there came sounds of clapping of hands from outside.

"They are ready," said Mrs. Mackenzie; and, as the two young women were added, turning to Colonel Lyndon. "It seems frivolous; but young people will be young people, and Veronika being an invalid, we have bound her to do what we can to amuse her."

So saying, she opened the door of the drawing-room and ushered her guests into a room which, for a few moments, perplexed them considerably.

The room was darker than usual, a crimson curtain having been drawn over the window, and the central object in the room was a slender, statuette figure, dressed in a flowing robe of dead white. The figure was slightly bent; golden hair fell in waving masses about the face; the eyes were half closed, down; the sweet, tremulous lips were half parted, and the face wore an expression of trouble or perplexity pitiful to behold. A tremor of fear seized Marguerite; she surely never had been so appalled.

It was so beautiful—so true—that Percy, who was the first to speak, said: "It was completely like a surprise." Who is it?" said the girl, hurrying whisper; then still lower, "What a lovely—lovely face! I did not think there was such a Marguerite in the world."

This was delightful to the little audience. But one felt disengaged, though why he was disengaged he would have found it hard to explain. "Do you not see who it is?" he asked.

"Oh! don't, Colonel Lyndon, don't!" cried Milly in an agony, while Janet and Veronika held up their fingers to her mouth. "But who is it? who is it?" persisted Percy, "Miss Browne," crossing over to where Veronika lay upon her couch, enjoying the little mystery, "do tell me."

Marguerite lay back again, and the girl in the white litten to cross from the ground, and, blushing deeply, crossed to the couch.

"Miss Morrison!" said Percy, in great surprise.

"Yes, Letty—my Letty! and you didn't know her," cried Milly, clapping her hands able a proceeding as he could have taken. He remained silent, however, like a king, as much as he might have wished to devote himself and making every one, and especially his mother and his little sister, feel by his moody temper and his wild projects.

Induced by this his infamy, and accustomed to the secret of his secretiveness, he told the sum of the case. Percy could not be tolerant of defeat. He was angry and impatient under it. His sunny temper and good-humored nature had been overruled. He talked cynically, was wrapped in gloom, and ceased from that pleasant consideration of the feelings and thoughts which had made his pride pale.

Said Percy should lose altogether the sympathy of some who may have begun to like him; but he would keep to himself in the chagrin that he had come to him. Kind words, if not the best, were the best of all for him.

"I shall never like you as you wish—never, never. Do, pray, understand me!" "Impossible!" he repeated, his face turning very white. "Do you really mean that?"

"I do, I do. If you have any regard for me, say no more. I should like to keep you as a friend. Veronika, I am in pain, that you were nothing more than a chagrin to me that he could not give me to him. Kind words, if not the best, were the best of all for him."

"He had loved her over her own hand, and turned speechless away. If she had been any one else—any other but the richest woman in England, she might have gone on with him; but he had intended to marry her, and he had said nothing. Poor young fellow! He knew, as he turned away, how those unspoken words had stung him.

The thought of her riches weighed like lead upon his heart, and sealed up his lips.

Already she could hear clasping him tight, and the sound of his voice, and the sound of his type. It was like bringing up old scenes of life, when he had been a soldier in India, and the housecleaning next week. Uncle Jack said he was going to Toronto to stay two weeks, and poor said he wished he could go.

A farmer near Frankford has been taken in by the piano fraud scheme, and was in Belleville the other day getting legal advice on the matter. It is surprising how farmers are taken in by these swindlers, and the victims are generally the ones who would not pay a dollar a year for a newspaper. It is such a class of men who want to make a quick profit, and hence they most readily fall a prey to these swindlers. The proposition made is that the agent can not sell the piano, as it is a sample, but will sell it to the subscriber, that when a certain number are sold, the instrument will then become the property of the farmer. The deluded farmer is then induced to sign a receipt for the piano, which is now given him, and this again evolved into a full fledged promissory note, and the verdict is "served him right."

Cleeket.

The first cricket match of the season, was played on the hill cultural ground, Friday last, June 25th, between two teams chosen from the whole club, captained by Geo. Conley and D. Allen. The playing was not very good, but the weather there has not been a cricket match in this place for several years. Had the crease been in better condition, the game would have been more effective, but as it was kept the score very low neither side made much more than 50 runs in both games. Mr. Gray, Vice President, implored with all proficiency, and gave satisfaction to both teams. W. J. Conley, captain of the home team.

LYNDON OF HIGH CLIFFE.

AN OLD SOLDIER'S LOVE STORY.

By C. DESDARD, Author of "When the Tide Was High," "The Artist and the Man," "Into a Larger Room," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XII.

A LITTLE HOUR OF PEACE.

Business had called Colonel Lyndon from Castle Ettrick. His solicitor, the head of firm that had managed the High Life project for him, had invited the High Life project to him if at all possible, to meet him there. Business was more important to Colonel Lyndon than it had been, for he had, or as he hope and believed, another besides himself to consider. He saw Lady Flora, who had come to remain as soon as he was free, and travelled on.

It was partly the somewhat mysterious purpose of the lawyer's letter, and partly a fear of what would happen if he told him of his speaking to Letty before he started. He still thought of her first, and he would not, for the sake of setting his own house in order, have risked the danger of losing her confidence. But with a friendly way of bidding him farewell with the little pleasure which she has in her life, he told her that he would certainly return to Castle Ettrick in a few days, encouraged him to hope that when a general meeting came, she would stay. Yet he could not deny that he was trembling on his lips.

The business at High Cliffe was soon transacted. Colonel Lyndon took the sum of his books and more closely into his affairs than he had previously done. He found that the value of his property was increasing, that he could afford to make good settlements on his wife, that a little more time and decorating would make High Cliffe a delightful summer residence. These set off at once the great satisfaction of his mind of business, which had been fearing that he had made a bad investment.

"Lyndon of High Cliffe is going to marry; you mark my words," he said to his wife that evening.

Hanapins would have been confirmed if he could have followed his client to London the next day.

The colonel had one intimate friend living there, the daughter of their nearest neighbour at High Cliffe, and she had married a man who was kept in London by his business the greater part of the year.

He was now the most popular man in the town.

"At last," she said, "I proposed it."

"Proposed what?"

"That you will fall in love before the year was out."

They went out together. The colonel had a diamond brooch who took them to a jeweller on whom his friend said he could depend, and they spent an hour at a cost.

He made his choice at last—a brooch set with diamonds and mounted in gold, as far as the terrace-steps, and had her good night with the respect he might have shown to a queen.

When Colonel Lyndon left Lady Flora, he took the direction of the summer-house, while he knew to be one of Letty's favourite haunts.

The little loop of pearls was in his pocket. He took it out of its case, and held it in the hollow of his hand. Would it, or would it not, be fitting and presentable to the little girl, who was so dear to him?

In the meantime, he hoped she would believe that he did not wish to make his mother and Letty jealous. Then, for the first time, he had no company, he sat down as far as the terrace-steps, and had her good night with the respect he might have shown to a queen.

"Will you let me know?" she said, looking at him affectionately.

"If there is anything to tell," he answered, "it is a curious secret."

"The moment that you love, and that does not love you," said the lady, "would be—"

"I think I have it," said the colonel hurriedly.

Without waiting for another word, he hastened off, made his final arrangements, said, with the little ring, of whose possession he was now master, to his jeweller, who put it in his breast-pocket, took the night mail for Scotland. At Edinburgh he remained for hour or two, Mr. Winstanley having requested him to go to some business connected with the ship which he had sent to Ettrick at about the same hour as on the former occasion, when Milt and Letty had given to his travelling companions. Wishing to give his respects to his old friend, he turned round the carriage containing his traps by the back way, and walked up to the house.

It was a dark night for the time of year. The sky was covered with clouds and obscured the stars, and the house was in the distance the low rumbling of thunder. The colonel saw no one in the grounds, but he heard voices which made him suppose that some one was in the pleasure-ground. Then, with a quick, swinging step, he walked along the avenue, and ran up the steps that led to the terrace. Lady Flora, who was in the drawing-room, saw him, and gave a little cry.

"Oh, colonel!" she said, "how glad I am to see you! We did not expect you so early."

"I thought I might venture to steal a march on you," he said. "How are you all? It seems ages since you went away."

"It seems to me," said Lady Flora, with a smile, "as it was."

"Letty—Miss Morrison."

"I believe she is in the school-room. I will send my maid to tell her you have arrived."

The maid, who was ruing her, went in search of Letty and returned with the news that she was neither in the school-room nor with Miss Morrison.

"There must have gone out. Foolish child—and the weather so threatening!" said Lady Flora. "If you are not too tired, come in."

"I will go in search of her with pleasure," he answered.

At this moment Mrs. Wilson, Lady Flora's daughter, and two or three other ladies came to draw the curtains of the room where the rain had been. Colonel Lyndon stood in the shadow while they were in the light, made sure that Letty was not among them, and then hurried away to look for her.

After her little supper with Milt in the school-room on evening, Letty had stolen down into the garden, where she had taken the diamond brooch that she had worn when she took, for a few moments, the character of Marguerite at Deep Deane, and that Venus had been without sparing of her kind, and as she walked slowly across the lawn, with her hands crossed in front of her and her eyes cast, she looked in the failing light like a beauty in a dream. Moving on to the sun-room, she lay down on the little rustic ledge, which crowned a low hill beyond the shrubbery that bounded the lawn.

Her heart was stopped and looked back. Her heart was beating much faster than usual, but her face was pale, and her foot and hands trembled as cold as ice. She lay there breathing hard, with her eyes closed, as if she were about to retrace her steps towards the house when a rustling amongst the shrubs to the right of the sun-room struck her ear, and she hesitated for a moment.

In the next moment she heard a familiar voice saying—

"Your pardon for disturbing you, Miss Morrison, it is really you."

"At the sound of your voice Letty trembled, and every particle of colour left her face. The rain had been all along, drawing and falling to the ground, but she was bound to speak."

Dobson, "More than that, I have hurried in my last speech, being rather rich. My uncle sent to me poor home news, and I had always supposed him to be a perfect moneybag."

"Captain Winstanley," also said, in a low and tremulous voice, "which had a most curious effect upon him, "I want to speak to

On Treating the Apparently Drowned.

The bathing and swimming season is at hand and so is the season of many deaths from drowning. If every man of fair intelligence were familiar with the approved methods of resuscitation, vital signs would be restored in many cases of drowning, who had been a dangerous time under water, many lives might be thereby saved. With the method many persons would learn and remember the process and would employ it in emergencies. A new manual which has recently appeared in a medical journal, superior to the long practised Sylvester or Marshall Hall method, has been recently suggested. A copy of this manual which has already been noticed in this Journal.

Rev. W. H. Cook, who has been appointed to the Cavan circuit, will leave for his new field of labor about the middle of next week.

A number of shade trees on Front street were lately been injured. This matter should be looked after, and such vandalism punished.

Now for bargains in Jewelry. Call on A. D. HANSSELL, 100 Front Street. Block. Fine watches, clocks, and jewelry. Repairing a specialty. Also a full line of Spots on hand. Remember the address A. D. HANSSELL, Belleville and Stirling.

At the door of one of our churches on Sunday evening a young fellow asked a young girl, "May I see you?" and with as much composure as he could muster. The little lady quickly replied, "No, but you may stay me start."

An old man seen by advertisement elsewhere Miles of China had determined to adopt the common sense cash system to their business, and offer at the same time great inducements to purchasers. Read that ad'vt. and note the bargains offered.

Preparations are being made for a demonstration to be held on the 1st of July, under the auspices of the Union. Among the athletic sports there will be Cricket, Lacrosse and Football matches. It is however we will do their utmost to make this a success.

The cold dry weather of spring and the first week in June was followed by an unusually hot spell. On Monday and Tuesday last the sun was almost constantly out, the thermometer ranging from 80° to 90° in the shade. Since the rain of Tuesday night, the weather has again become cooler.

A few weeks ago we called attention to the fact that a number of boys were regularly in the habit of going swimming on Sundays instead of going to church or school. This practice is still being continued, and their parents do not appear to exercise control over it. Every constable should be instructed to look after them.

Mr. Edmund Connelly, of Rawdon, has just purchased a cow and three half-horned pigs from J. G. Seall & Bros., Gainsborough. They are fine looking animals, and will yield milk and cost $25 for the pair. Paying close attention by reason of their ungovernable animals is one of the best means by which farming can be made to pay.

An Ice Cream Social and Lecture will be held in the Baptist Church, Stirling, on Tuesday evening, June 11th, at 7 o'clock, after which Mr. J. Pascoe Best, of Campbellford, will give a Lecture on "A Trip through British Columbia and Washington Territory." See small bill for further particulars.

The long drought has at length been broken, and during the past few days there have been welcome showers. The dry spell was however continued for about two months, from the middle of April till the middle of June, and was then followed by a fair crop of hay. The crop is concerned, except on new land, has been raised in a fair crop. Under the influence of the general showers there will probably be a fair good grain crop yet.

Rawdon has some hale and hearty old men. We were informed the other day of a man who is in his eighties, who has a spring carried one sap bucket to the bush and made over one hundred pounds of maple sugar. He has also made a number of half an acre of lawn, splits rails and fence posts. He has been doing spring planting, etc. This work was not done of necessity, as he is a man of independent means, and able to spend the remainder of his days in ease.

BIG CLEARING SALE!

TIMES ARE CHANGING, AND WE CHANGE WITH THE TIMES.

On and after SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1891, we will sell for Cash or Barter only, and that means cheap, very cheap, Goods.

Commencing Saturday, we will hold a GRAND CLEARING SALE of our entire stock. This past week our goods have been marked down, and are going, some at cost, some below, and the great bulk at a very slight advance.

It is better for the customers as well as the merchants to pay cash and buy their goods cheaper and avoid large accounts in the fall.

Compare our new prices with what you have been in the habit of paying for the same goods and you will soon see the great advantage of coming to us.

Remember, no shoddy goods, but a good stock and cheap.

We will still pay the highest price for Butter, Eggs, and all kinds of Farm Produce.

We can't begin to give you all our prices, but a few, and then come and see and judge for yourself.

STIRLING, - ONT.

P. S.—All overdue Accounts and Notes must be paid at once.

HOW WE SELL SO CHEAP.

We are asked every day how we sell so cheap. Well, the reason is we make our dollar (in buying) bring us over one hundred cents. And we are making our customer's dollar bring them such bargains in good honest goods that they are telling their friends far and near.

SO THE TRADE KEEPS ON INCREASING.

READ:

500 yds. Print, regular price 12c., our price 8c. Guaranteed fast in color.

1000 pairs Ladies' and Children's Cotton Hose, regular price 12c., our price 5c.

300 yds. all wool Dress Goods, regular price 15c., our price 10c.

1000 pretty Wreaths of Flowers, regular price 25c., our price 10c.

500 fine French Flowers, regular price 75c., our price 25c.

10 dozen Men's Socks, regular price 12c., our price 8c.

50 dozen more Ladies' Vests worth 20c., our price 11c.

Something very useful this weather—a lovely line of Fans, Japanese and Palm Leaf Fans—to sell at 5c. and 10c.

COME EARLY AND SECURE FIRST CHOICE!

NOTE:

Our prices are less than cost price. Some merchants will tell you that we are not honest because we sell our goods less than cost. We do sell less than their cost but not less than they cost us.

You ask how can we do it. Simply by using our ready money, knowing when and where to buy. There has been money lost on all the immense bargains we are giving you at our place of business, but that has nothing to do with you or us. Wholesale houses must unload and we are ready to help them when they have bargains to offer.

ALL FOR YOUR GAIN.

In buying your Dry Goods don't forget our Grocery Stock; very complete and prices right.

To which the following reply was given:

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS.—Your presence here this evening is very cheering to myself and family. The kind words that you have just uttered accompanied with the expression of concern for my welfare are most welcome.

Many are careless and disregard the summer months, but we have been more than usually diligent in our work, and have done more in a foolish manner than in the "trip."

Proceeds, "I am told, are good."

A lady who has a very religious husband, was at the breakfast table one morning when her husband's prayer was longer than usual. She asked him what he was doing with his time. He replied, "I am waiting for my wife to come home." She wrinkled and twisted and thought of her biscuits, and at last, when her husband started off again on his errand, she started the gravy over by saying, "Lord John, cut it short; I've had enough in the oven."

People cannot be too frequently urged to keep out of debt and all the perplexities which debt entails. This duty can be done by a fixed contribution to pay out for the expenses of pleasure and for the most rigid economy in expense. This duty should not be postponed; commence now.
